

Stumped About Spice

DEAR TIM

Dear Tim:

My wife says we need to spice things up in our marriage. You've been married for a long time, what do you think she's thinking?

-Lost on Lytham

Dear Lost:

First of all, trying to figure out what a woman's thinking is a path to nowhere. I can tell you from experience that as much as she'd like you to know what she's thinking, you have no idea and you'll be wasting a lot of time trying to figure it out. You're better off just admitting defeat and asking. The short-term shame is a trade-off for long-term peace. And that's what you're really looking for, isn't it? By the way, if you're looking to spice up anything besides your marriage, try Aimee's Blue Ribbon Spices. They're grown in Granville and will add a little kick to just about any meal. Aisle 2.

Dear Tim:

The stock market is acting schizophrenic lately and I'm in a pickle. Should I stay in or get out?

-Panicked on Palmer

Dear Panicked:

If you're asking me for financial advice, you must be in a pickle. You know who else is into pickles? Tony Packo's. Aisle 2.
