

Droning On

Dear Tim:

I hear that Amazon is kicking around the idea of having its packages delivered by drones. Am I the only one who thinks having little helicopters buzzing around all over the sky and dropping things on people's doorsteps is a recipe for disaster?

-Heads Up on HelstonDear Heads Up:

I'm with you. I'm perfectly fine ordering items online and paying a little extra for expedited shipping if I need it, but having my purchases delivered by "death from above" seems like overkill (no pun intended). You won't ever have to worry about that from us. We deliver by van, so you won't have to duck when we drop off your groceries. And if you order from our online Special Order Store, your hard-to-find, shelf-stable specialty food items will also arrive by driver. He or she may not be as sophisticated as a drone, but you won't risk getting your hand chopped off when you answer the door.
