

Cautiously Uncursed

Dear Tim:

With the Cavaliers winning the NBA Championship and the Indians playing well, is it safe to assume that Cleveland's curse has finally been lifted, or should we simply be waiting for Lake Erie to rise up and swallow the city whole just to prove it isn't?

-Cynical on CircleDear Cynical:

Wow. You must be from Cleveland, because only people from northeast Ohio could possibly see a dark cloud inside a silver lining. My advice to you is just enjoy the city's newfound success. It may have taken five decades, but it's finally here. Cleveland is no longer a perennial loser. No longer a laughingstock. You're out of the cellar. Enjoy the sunshine and fresh air. Grab a Great Lakes Brewing Co. pale ale from aisle 1 and celebrate. And if you want to hang onto your pathetic past like a security blanket, don't worry. You've still got the Browns.
