

Election Correction

Dear Tim:

I'm not sure I'm going to be able to stand all the shouting and mudslinging that comes with the last three months of the presidential campaign. I didn't think things could go any lower after the conventions, but I've been proven wrong once again. How do we end this non-stop election-cycle insanity?

-Vote Me Off on Vassar

Dear Voter:

If I knew, they'd elect me president. And trust me, no one wants that. The only things in my closet are skeletons. What I suggest is going to the old student body system.

You know – whoever gets the most votes becomes president and whoever gets the second-most votes becomes vice president. That way both candidates would have to find a way to work together in the end. And they might be a little nicer in the beginning. Speaking of working together, have you tried our broccoli & cheese soup? Positively delicious.

TIM
