

Recipe For Romance

Dear Tim:

With Valentine's Day this weekend, I've been trying to come up with a gift idea for my wife. You know, something out of the ordinary that she wouldn't expect from me. Something romantic, but not over the top. Any ideas?

Dear Stumped:

If your wife is like mine, she won't be expecting anything out of the ordinary, so you're on the right track. I always think the best way to avoid the jewelry/flowers/candy cliché is with an experience. And nothing beats a romantic dinner (at least one she doesn't have to prepare). If you need some advice about what to make and how to make it, get a recommendation from James in the meat department and Dave in the wine section. They'll give you their best romantic recipes. Then set the scene with some nice linens and candles. If that doesn't do the trick, maybe reconsider where you're getting your advice.
