

Going Roundabout

Dear Tim:

I understand they're putting in something called a roundabout at the intersection of Tremont, Redding and Abington. Is that some kind of new traffic signal or just a metaphor for how we're all just pointlessly going around in circles?

-Confused on Canterbury

Dear Confused:

I'm not sure that qualifies as a metaphor, because it feels like I'm literally going round and round in circles most days.

But yes, it does look like they're putting in a roundabout there. It's one of those European traffic things where you don't have to stop unless there's already someone in the circle before you get there. Then again, if you've ever tried getting into one of those things in heavy traffic, you know how prone they make you to say a few words you wouldn't use in front of your grandkids. Of course if you want to practice cursing, you could just try getting into our parking lot these days.

TIM
